Contribution of the degree to the professional profile

This subject will provide students with a general knowledge of the normative framework and main conceptual and practical challenges of EU Corporate Law and Corporate Engineering. Thus, it will contribute to preparing the professional development of skills useful to work in business enterprises, and law firms doing business in the EU and across its Member States. It will grant students tools to evaluate critically the current state of EU company law, corporate governance, regulatory competition among EU Member States, the pressure on them to reduce capital requirements and the EU and national efforts to reduce the legislative burdens on small and medium size enterprises in an increasingly harmonized field, as well as the challenges that remain unresolved.

During the course students will have the opportunity to deal with issues arising in some of the latest and most interesting cross-border transactions in the EU and also become familiar with some key substantive corporate and commercial laws of Spanish, English, German and French laws, as well as with the way in which certain European cross-border transactions are structured, documented and negotiated.

TEACHING METHODOLOGY

General methodology of the subject

Contact hours methodology: Activities

We will mainly follow a problem-based learning method. Students will prepare case studies in groups or individually (as requested). Case studies will consist of real cases or hypothetical scenarios, whereby students may be asked, for example, to draft/review/negotiate legal documentation or to draft a memorandum providing a practical solution to clients' requests.

The course will follow an interactive format, combining presentations, analysis of legal documents, with participation of the students (exchange of views and discussions, and Q&A periods). A significant importance will be accorded to the analysis of the EU Directives and the ECJ case-law.

In addition, the themes composing the course will feature interactive workshops or practical classes. At these interactive elements of experiential learning, participation of the students is required. Students will intervene under the guidance of the professor, who will provide comments and feedback.

Outside class methodology: Activities

In relation to case studies additional background documentation will be provided which will include, sometimes, questions to help students to focus on key issues. When preparing the class students should read the materials thoroughly and try to answer the questions raised. The Socratic Method, as commonly practiced in Anglo-Saxon law schools will be also used, so students should be prepared to answer both the questions raised in the materials and during the lectures.

Each student is supposed to structure his / her individual study autonomously, using the course syllabus as a guideline, and taking into consideration the advice of the professor along the course. In preparation to each lesson, students are requested to read and examine the background materials to be specified in advance, in addition to the bibliography and resources listed in the course syllabus. Students are requested to prepare in advance for the workshops and debate activities that will be held during the course, by working on the materials and following the specific indications provided by the professor. After each lesson and at the conclusion of the course, students are expected to revise course contents, notes taken during lesson, as well as the materials referred to under basic bibliography. The professor could provide additional references for supplementary research if required.
